Report on Field Visit to Raja Dinkar Kelkar Museum

As part of the B.Ed. curriculum, under the guidance of Professor Pallavi Chavan Ma'am, it was compulsory for us to visit a historical place and record our experiences. For our field visit, we went to Raja Dinkar Kelkar Museum, located at Natu Baag, Shukrawar Peth, Pune, Maharashtra.

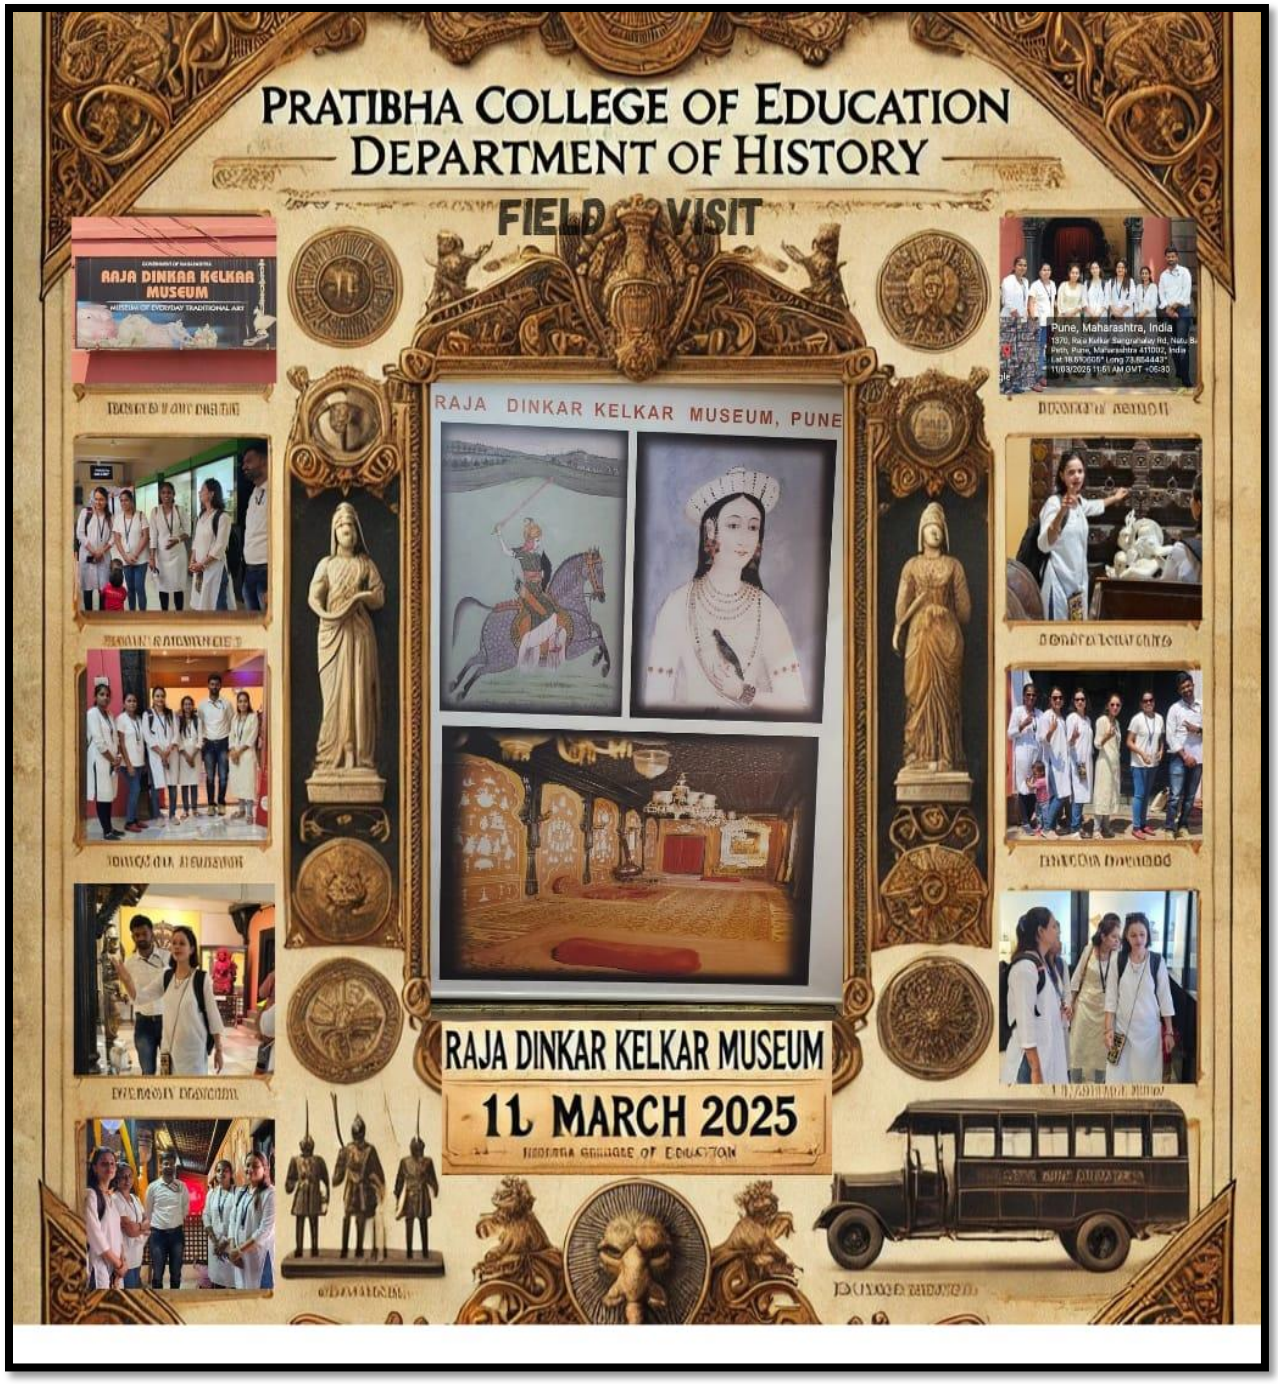

The aim of the visit was to gain real-life knowledge through observation of historical objects, places, and events. Field visits are an educational procedure that allows students to learn by experiencing things directly rather than only reading about them in textbooks.

As history students, visiting historical places is very important, as it helps us understand the chapters in our textbooks better. The visit proved to be extremely useful as we learned about a variety of objects used in the past. We discovered many new things and traditions, some of which we were not even aware of before. The museum widened our horizons, encouraged creativity, and gave us a deeper understanding of our cultural heritage.

The Raja Dinkar Kelkar Museum was originally established by Dr. Dinkar G. Kelkar in memory of his son, Raja. The museum houses an extensive collection of artifacts, which provided us with practical insights into history and culture.

The field visit broadened our knowledge and perspective. It helped us connect with people's traditions and respect different cultures. It also gave us the opportunity to experience history through real objects and sources, enhancing our understanding of the subject beyond classroom learning.

Overall, the visit to the Raja Dinkar Kelkar Museum was an enriching experience. It expanded our horizons, deepened our respect for cultural diversity, and strengthened our knowledge of historical places, objects, and sources of history.
